

THINGS WE'VE LEARNED FROM NANCY DREW

“Bushes make a clever screen while you eavesdrop on unsuspecting suspects.”

“If someone’s trying to buy a house and it suddenly becomes haunted, it’s probably not a coincidence.”

“If you’re planning to investigate a dark spooky attic, you might want to bring extra batteries for your flashlight.”

“There’s nothing worse than a threatening note that demands you stay at home, when you’re just not the stay-at-home kind of gal!”

“Always remember, writers of anonymous notes are cowards!”

“While waiting out an overheating car in the desert, it’s always refreshing to touch up your lipstick before your rescuers arrive.”

“Red lipstick makes a great window SOS when you’ve been kidnapped and stolen away on a plane!”

“A smart sleuth keeps an overnight case in the trunk of her car with pajamas, a robe, two changes of clothes, toiletries, and at certain times of the year a bathing suit—in case of sudden adventures.”

“When your home has been burglarized, it’s always a good idea to indulge in a midnight snack of angel food cake and fruit juice!”

“When he wants to make a date with you to solve a mystery, you’ve got him wrapped around your fingers.”
